SATURDAY MORNING NOV 1 1879

FACT OF REPRESENTATION

The present agitation concerning the ratio of representation and the apportionment of the members of congress The Constitution provides that the number of representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty thousand inhabitants but each state shall have at least one representative and until enumeration shall be made the state of New Hampshire shall be entitled to three Massachusetts eight Rhode Island and Providence Plantations one Connecticut five New York six New Jersey four Pennsylvania eight Delaware one Maryland six Virginia ten North Carolina seven South Carolina five and Georgia three A clause was inserted requiring an enumeration of the inhabitants every ten years with the further provision that representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several states according to their numbers

The house of representatives the first congress under the constitution therefore consisted of sixty five members and the apportionment among the several states was virtually what it had been under the confederation This was deemed the most satisfactory apportionment till an enumeration could be had Yet in fact there was not one member to thirty thousand inhabitants since the census taken the next year 1790 showed a total population of 3 929 214 At the rate of one for thirty thousand the house of representatives of the first congress would have contained probably one hundred and twenty members

The apportionment adopted under the returns of 1790 allowed one member for 33 000 inhabitants This gave a house of 105 members By the enumeration of the year 1800 the population of the states was ascertained to be 5 234 054 The ratio of representation was still kept at 33 000 under which the membership of the house was increased to 103 After the census of 1810 the representative ratio was enlarged to 35 000 after 1820 to 40 000 after 1830 to 47 700 after 1840 to 70 680 after 1850 to 93 423 after 1860 to 127 381 and after 1870 to 130 535 Growth of population was however so very rapid that though the basis of apportionment was so greatly enlarged from decade to decade still the house of representatives increased rapidly in members By the census of 1870 the population of the states was ascertained to be 38 115 641 The act of congress which made an apportionment under this enumeration fixed the number of representatives at 292 This number of representatives multiplied by the ratio (130 535) would give 38 11 836 inhabitants—a figure extremely near that of the actual enumeration

The other day we stated that the basis of apportionment at this time was one member for 131 000 inhabitants A round number was used—the actual basis being one for 130 535 This has not been changed since it was adopted after the census of 1870 However the act which made this apportionment and which fixed the number of representatives at 292, contained a provision that whenever a new state shall be admitted the representatives assigned to it shall be in addition to the number two hundred and ninety two and as Colorado has since been admitted with one representative the house now consists of 293 members

It is not probable that the number of representatives will be much increased under the next apportionment The house is now so large as to be almost unwieldy though as yet less than half as large as the British house of commons nor our system of politics makes the house of representatives a more turbulent and less deliberative body than the commons of England and a prudent regard for the transaction of business would seem to require that its numbers should not be much increased And yet it is not likely that states which have gained little in population will be willing to give up part of their representatives as they must of necessity unless the whole number be much increased for several of the states have gained population so rapidly that they must be assigned many more representatives than now There is nothing in the constitution which forbids the number of representatives to exceed 300 or any other number Most of the eastern and all the southern states except Texas and Missouri must lose representatives if not their relative strength in the house after the apportionment under the census of 1880 The increased representation will be gained mainly by the rapidly growing states of the upper Mississippi valley It is apparent that this will produce a new distribution of political power as the strong republican states will undoubtedly make largest gains The new state of Kansas will come up almost or quite to the rank of Georgia and Tennessee Minnesota will equal Mississippi or Alabama while Michigan will go far ahead of either Kentucky or Virginia

DEMOCRATIC GAINS

Some of the more sensible sort of democrats claim gains in the recent elections though on very peculiar grounds They say that for ten years the financial fallacy known as the Ohio idea has been a deadly ulcer in the vitals of the party costing it election after election and sending one alleged statesman after another to his political grave More than all it has been largely instrumental in costing the party the confidence of the country causing sensible men to regard it with distrust and making them afraid for reasons connected with the business welfare of the country to see the party come into power It is said now that the idea that is the fiat money craze has received a death blow and can trouble the party no more and this is claimed as a positive gain Also that defeat has taught the party that it will not pay to encourage and count on southern sectionalism and this is put down as another gain This peculiar line of looking at defeat is not without a degree of plausibility though examination of the statements will not redound to the credit of the democratic party It is equivalent to a statement that the business of the party consists in the spoils of office and that the failure of the party to secure these spoils has paralyzed the democratic party

CITY.

JACK IS TROUBLE.—Concerning Jack Dowd, who is so well known here in police circles, a San Francisco exchange of the 26th says: "The notorious bunko-player, Jack Dowd, was arrested in this city yesterday, on a charge from the chief of police at Sacramento. The crime with which Dowd is charged is that of grand larceny. It appears that Jack is wanted on the regular charge, and that C. G. Kennedy was roped in by Dowd, and lost $300, cash, and a draft for $10 on Biggs & Co., bankers, Washington Territory. Dowd attempted to negotiate the draft in S. F. STUDY OF THE CHINESE LANGUAGE.

A PROFESSORSHIP FOR INSTRUCTION IN CHINESE ESTABLISHED AT HARVARD—FORM OF LANGUAGE TO BE STUDIED.

NEW YORK, Oct. 27.—The Boston Post on Wednesday last a chair for instruction in Chinese was established in Harvard. At first signs the need of the study of the formless Chinese language at classic Cambridge may not be seen, but it must be remembered that the wealth of many Brahmins of Beacon street was built up by the China trade, and that the paltry sayings and doctrines of Kung Fu Tse the most sagely ancient teacher—have long been discussed and accepted in the retired parlors of Chestnut street. Thus reasons have existed for some time for a study of Chinese. The establishment of a chair is not the result of a new agitation. For some years past Harvard graduates have occasionally gone to China to engage in various official duties. E. P. Drew, of the class of 1861, who, with Francis P. Knight, has been mainly instrumental in founding this instructorship, has gained a high position in the Chinese customs service, which has been filled by foreigners, principally English. In 1874 Drew chose three young men of that year's class to enter this service, and their career has been so successful that the Chinese government now desires to procure more. The purpose of the chair is to afford opportunities for students who desire to study Chinese literature and history, for those who desire to enter official life in China, for those who propose to enter on business in certain ports, and for those who propose becoming missionaries. The form of language to be studied is the Mandarin, or official dialect. This is the lingua Romana of the Chinese. It is the language of officials and educated men, and is also understood in the northeastern part of the empire, and particularly in the trading ports of Shanghai, Ang Ize, Chefoo and Tien-tsin. To the majority of the Chinese people, however, the Mandarin dialectis about as intelligible as that of a London lawyer. The study of Chinese will be no easy task at Harvard. The correct modulations of the various tones; the meaning of the various characters, demand long and serious study. Hillier, interpreter to the British legation at Peking, says a faithful student may get a fair hold on the language in three years time. Drew, on the other hand, says four and a half hours daily for eighteen months will secure a fair mastery of it, while still another gentleman says he learned Chinese enough in six months to enable him to do his official work. It is stated that there are 145 modifications of tone, and 4000 vocables in the Peking dialect, and that 2000 combinations of characters are said to be sufficient for the use of beginners. The less copious Mandarin dialect still presents sufficient difficulties, since a knowledge of 2000 or 3000 characters is only said to be a respectable knowledge. The text book to be used at Harvard is Sir Thomas Wade's "Progressive Courses in Colloquial and Documentary Chinese," which has been proved to be trustworthy. Students in the British legation are supposed to master this in a given time, but they give their whole minds to it. The Harvard experiments is not undertaken at the expense of the University. Its cost is defrayed by a subscription of $8500, collected by Knight from retired Chinese merchants, cotton manufacturers and regular subscribers to the university funds. Knight, together with Drew, selected an instructor in China, and he has now settled down in Cambridge with his family. Ko Kunhua is his name, which the "customs" have already shortened into "Mr. Ko." He is an intelligent and educated man, about forty-five years old, refined and dignified in his manners, and of known capacity to teach and write Chinese. He has with him a wife, five children and two servants, and intends to stay here at least three years. They wear the Chinese dress, and have not yet been seduced from their national food by the charms of pumpkin pies and baked beans. Like all other Chinese, however, they are fast becoming Americanized. They have already made many warm friends, and bid fair to give a lively filip to the rather monotonous life of Cambridge society.
